The competition was tight with approximately 390 entries from libraries around the country. The award will be presented at the American Library Association's (ALA) annual conference at the end of June.

The annual PR Xchange Awards recognize the best public relations materials produced by libraries in the past year. Entries are evaluated based on content, originality, and design. These awards are sponsored by the Library Leadership Administration and Management Association's Public Relations and Marketing Section, a division of ALA.
